RESERVE BANKS OPEN TODAY IN REGIONAL CITIES

New Banking System Goes Into Effect Throughout the Country

ALL READY FOR BUSINESS

New Act Is Designed to Give More Elastic Currency System

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—After months of work on the part of the federal reserve board and preparation by the banks which will be members of the new system the 12 federal reserve banks will open their doors to business tomorrow. Their entrance into the field of rediscount will mark the first great change in the banking system in this country in the last 50 years since the national bank was conceived and called into being after the Civil war.

The 12 banks designed to take care of the commercial needs of the entire nation are located in the following cities: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, Atlanta, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Francisco.

For the present the operations of the banks will be limited largely to the rediscounting of notes, drafts and bills of exchange, but, as experience is gained, steps to have them exercise their other functions under the currency act will be taken up. The directors of all the banks have been selected, the board has named its representative for each, and suitable quarters have been secured in all the 12 cities.

Ready for Business.

Officials here will watch the progress of the system with the utmost interest. It starts on its mission with 7,571 member banks. Their authorized capital is put at $106,795,600, of which one-sixth has been called and is in their vaults. The exact figures for the cash reserves in all 12 banks has not been [illegible] [illegible] but the [illegible] puts the amount at close to $250,000,000, drawn under the law from the present reserve agents of member banks.

The reserve banks begin operations at a time when members of the board feel that there is an excellent opportunity to test out the value of the system. Their ability to rediscount commercial paper has been counted upon as one of the means to loosen the purse strings of banks, provide machinery for caring for crops and generally meet business needs.

The formal call at opening will be sent out tomorrow by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. Every step the reserve board thought was necessary preceding the opening has been taken and the formal signal will be largely a matter of form.

FEDERAL QUARANTINE AT CHICAGO LIFTED

Union Stock Yards and Packing Houses Open at Midnight for Business

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—The Union stock yards and the packing houses, scrubbed and disinfected after nine days of quarantine in the government and state fight against hoof and mouth disease, opened for business at midnight tonight, all parts of the industry having been declared thoroughly sanitary and rid of any danger of spreading the disease.

It was not expected that any killing would be undertaken before noon tomorrow. Although railroads had been notified that the quarantine was raised and shipments could be accepted for Chicago only a few cars were on the sidetracks and no arrangements had been made to handle these until the cattle buyers arrived for their regular day's work.

Cattle, sheep and hogs will be received for slaughter only subject to the following federal regulations:

No animal may be shipped from quarantined areas. Animals must be shipped in disinfected cars and from disinfected pens. The cars must be sealed and no stops made for food or water in infected areas. All animals shipped to Chicago must be slaughtered within 36 hours. No live animals will be allowed to leave here.

KING GEORGE'S EQUERRY IS GERMAN PRISONER

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 15.—A dispatch to the Telegraaf from Berlin says that Viscount Crichton, extra equerry to King George, has been made a prisoner.

The Handelsblad says that during the first 10 days of November 6,000 loaves of bread purchased with funds raised by a toll levied on pedestrians and vehicles entering Malines, Belgium, were distributed among the poor of that city.

STREET [illegible]ISES SPRINGS HO[illegible]ES AND CLUB LIFE

DOESN'T LIKE GARDEN OF THE GODS

Collier's Weekly Publishes a Story on Impressions of Staff Writer

There are just two really civilized places between San Francisco and New York, Colorado Springs and Chicago, an Englishman is quoted as saying by Julian Street in [illegible] of Colorado Springs and Cripple Creek, which appears in the current issue of Collier's Weekly [illegible] installment [illegible] series. Street [illegible] Colorado [illegible] [illegible] different [illegible] a little [illegible] other city [illegible] State. The author is lavish in his praise of the city, its lands, [illegible] residence [illegible] well paved streets and beautiful parks. But he [illegible] understand why the Garden of the Gods should exist.

Street [illegible] Wallace Morgan, a staff artist, visited Colorado Springs during the latter part of [illegible] of this year [illegible] really [illegible] the region. The pair spent two or three days here securing material for the article which appears in this week's issue of the weekly. At the time it was stated that the object of the series was to make the general traveler [illegible] acquainted with the sights of America. Since then, however, the articles have taken on more of a character study of cities. Street and Morgan traveled over the greater part of the country in working up the "Abroad at Home" series. Here's what the writer says in part of Colorado Springs:

In a certain city that I visited in my travels I met one night at dinner one of those tall pink-cheeked slim-legged young polo-playing Englishmen who proceeded to tell me [illegible] positive British way exactly what the United States amounted to. He said New York was ripping. He said [illegible] was ripping. He said American girls were ripping.

"But," said he, "there are just two really civilized places between San Francisco and New York."

The idea entertained me. I asked which places he meant.

"Chicago," he said, "[illegible] [illegible] Springs."

"But Colorado Springs is a little [illegible] of a place, isn't it?" I asked him.

"About 30,000."

"Why is it so especially civilized?"

"It just is," he answered. "There's polo there."

"But polo doesn't make civilization," I said.

"Oh, yes, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] wherever [illegible] find polo you find good clubs and good society and really good tea."

This and further [illegible] of a like nature [illegible] some pleasant letters of introduction [illegible] [illegible] companion and me [illegible] ourselves one afternoon from Denver to the vaunted seat of civilization some miles to the south.

Polite Society in the Rockies

Colorado Springs is somewhat higher than Denver and seems to nestle closer to the mountains. The moment you alight from the train and see the park facing the station and the pleasant facade of the Antlers hotel beyond you feel the peculiar charm of the little city. It is well laid out with very wide streets, very good public buildings and office buildings and really remarkable homes.

The homes of Colorado Springs explain the place. They are of every variety of architecture and are inhabited by a [illegible] [illegible] variety of people. You will see half timbered English houses built by Englishmen

EVERYTHING READY FOR FAIR OPENING

Exposition Will Open on February 20, Complete and on Time

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 15.—Three months and five days from today, on February 20, 1915, the Panama-Pacific International exposition will be opened on time and complete to the last detail.

The world's exposition building record was broken when six months before the opening day all the great exhibit palaces were completed and turned over to the various chiefs of departments for the installation of exhibits. At the present time large consignments of foreign and domestic exhibits are arriving daily on the docks at the exposition grounds. The 12 miles of track within the grounds are in constant use in the distribution of these shipments.

The first Japanese shipment of 1,671 cases has been received, 10 consignments of 1,568 crates and cases have arrived from the Canadian government, 150 crates of rare bulbs made up part of the shipment from Holland, 125,000 pounds of exhibits and material have come from the Philippines, 110,000 pounds of materials from Argentina and heavy shipments from England, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, China and Italy already are on the grounds.

CARRANZA GIVEN 24 HOURS TO RETIRE BY GENERAL GUTIERREZ

Cardinal O'Connell Says Pres. Wilson Should Withhold Recognition

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Important dispatches from Mexico were received by the state department today, but they left officials very much in doubt as to what is going on in the southern republic.

The first was a consular dispatch from Aguascalientes announcing that General Gutierrez, named by the convention as provisional president of Mexico, yesterday demanded Carranza's retirement as first chief of the Constitutionalists within 24 hours.

The second came from Consul Silliman, personal representative of President Wilson in Mexico City, saying that the possibilities of a peaceful settlement of the differences between Carranza and the Aguascalientes convention leaders were brighter today than at any time since the breach occurred.

Agreement Expected

General Blanco, commanding the Carranza forces in Mexico City, Mr. Silliman said, advised him that an agreement binding the leaders of the warring factions to adjust their differences without further hostilities was confidently expected. That Carranza would consent to be a party to such an agreement was indicated.

Later advices from Aguascalientes said General Gutierrez had informed Carranza that unless a definite answer to his demands was forthcoming by Sunday night a general movement against him would be ordered.

Both Aguascalientes messages were dated yesterday and officials do not know whether the ultimatum had reached Carranza before Mr. Silliman filed his dispatch.

No mention was made of the report of a truce suspending hostilities between the Carranza and Villa forces until November 20 was made in any of the dispatches.

Catholics Oppose Recognition.

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—Opposition to the recognition by President Wilson of any government in Mexico until religious freedom was guaranteed was urged by Cardinal O'Connell in an address to the Federation of Catholic Societies today.

"The administration," said the cardinal, "has at last done something to insure the safety of our nuns and priests in Mexico from the brutal rapacity and barbarism of those savages who [illegible] more than a year past have conclusively proven their absolute unfitness to govern. But the good work is far from finished.

"We are hearing much these days about peace and freedom. Let us first of all see to it that at our very doors the peace, the conscience and freedom of religion, the source and foundation of all real peace and freedom, are not violated by men who might well be brought before the tribunal of the common law of humanity instead of aspiring to the presidency of a sister republic and our nearest neighbor. But Catholic men will not rest until the truth is made known as it is and not as it is reported by those who have proved themselves publicly and privately incapable of being considered trustworthy of this government.

Scores "Masonic Conspiracy."

"And when the truth is known all the world will realize that for the sake of our public honor as a nation we must put an end to the Masonic conspiracy which has for two years deluged Mexico with blood, drained the material resources of that country and spread atheism and anarchy over a land once happy and industrious.

"Let us tolerate no further even a suspicion of what has been more than once openly asserted that the leaders of this anarchy are receiving underhand support from this country, but let our Catholic men continue to investigate the truth of conditions and then stand for the truth in all their might until every word and sentence of its revelation is heard at Washington.

"This is the work which faces every Catholic man in this country today. Let the federation lead the way and America and Mexico will one day owe it a great debt of gratitude."

The federation adopted resolutions addressed to President Wilson along the lines of the cardinal's address.

First Chief Offers to Leave Country if Villa Follows

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 15.—General Obregon tonight received a dispatch from Cordoba saying that General Carranza had made an offer to Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez to turn over the military power to General Gonzales and leave for Havana to arrive there not later than November 25 if General Villa would turn over his command to General Gutierrez and be in Havana the same date. The Aguascalientes convention must meet in Mexico City the day Generals Villa and Carranza arrive in Havana according to General Carranza's offer.

The convention in Mexico City then must ratify the election of General Gutierrez or choose another provisional president who would hold power until the calling of general elections. If on November 30 these conditions are not met General Carranza, according to General Obregon, will resume power as first chief of the Constitutionalists.

SUFFRAGE FIGHT EXPECTED TODAY

POLITICS STORM CENTER OF CONVENTION

Factional Controversy Is Main Consideration at Nashville Meeting

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 15.—A decisive stage in the fight between the National American Woman Suffrage association and the congressional union, a suffrage organization which was [illegible] from membership in the national association, may be reached at tomorrow's session of the annual convention here. Politics within the [illegible] organization [illegible] many delegates busily occupied today, although the convention was not in session.

There were several series of conferences in question [illegible] national officers and others [illegible] association. One of the results [illegible] to draft [illegible] of a resolution to be presented to the convention tomorrow by Mrs. [illegible] W. Ross of [illegible], which prominent delegates predicted would [illegible] the fight between the association and the congressional union. It reads as follows:

Political Creed

"Whereas, the rapid increase in number of states granting suffrage and the consequent [illegible] of women along nonpartisan lines into party [illegible] makes a definite [illegible] of policy [illegible] national suffrage association necessary and expedient, therefore be it resolved that the National American Woman Suffrage association [illegible] absolutely opposed to holding any political party responsible for the opinions and acts of its individual members or holding any individual responsible for the majority action of his party on suffrage."

There were many indications tonight that tomorrow would witness one of the most exciting sessions of the present convention. Some of the matters which many delegates supposed had been settled by the convention, including the scope and methods of work of the congressional committee and the association's authority over state organizations, apparently have not been disposed of to the full satisfaction of a number of the delegates.

Fight Centers on Campaigns.

The congressional committee on the opening day adopted a resolution declaring the organization should be nonpartisan in national politics and should confine its campaign only against individual candidates. Many delegates insist that this action [illegible] definite expression of policy [illegible] the association itself.

It was reported [illegible] favored a definite declaration by the association prohibiting [illegible] associations from [illegible] state organization dominated by members of the congressional union which has openly declared opposition to the Democratic [illegible] union [illegible].

The resolutions committee has held a number of extended and animated sessions behind closed doors and it is reported resolutions may be brought in relating to the matter of specifically restricting the congressional committee's work.

NEGROES PROTEST AGAINST SEGREGATION OF RACES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Members of the delegation that went to the White house last week with a protest against race segregation in government departments laid their case before a mass meeting of negroes here today. The meeting adopted a formal protest to the American people against the pronounced tendency in American law and public opinion to draw the color line.

"We make this appeal at this time," said the statement, "because it has been ascertained by us from the highest authority in the nation that it is the policy of the federal government to draw the color line to make what the newspapers of the country denominate and denounce as 'Jim Crow government.'"

WHIPPED FOR SELLING COTTON BELOW PRICES

ARDMORE, Okla., Nov. 15.—Because he is said to have sold a bale of cotton for less than 10 cents a pound, the price fixed throughout southern Oklahoma, Joshua Samuels, a cotton grower in Carter county, was whipped by masked men early today. He was called from his home and beaten with a piece of rope soaked in water.

College Professor Worries Himself to Death Over War

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal., Nov. 15.—Dr. Ewald Fluegel, head of the Stanford English philology department and a scholar of international reputation, died today as a result of a general breakdown attributed to worry over the European war. He was born in Leipzig in 1863.

Professor Fluegel possessed what is said to be the largest and most complete personal library of old and middle English books in the world.

A widow and four children living in [illegible] survive him.

BELGIAN KING IS HONORED BY FETE DAY OBSERVANCE

London and Paris Join in Celebration for Heroic Fighting Monarch

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Thousands of Belgian refugees who sought temporary homes in England when their country was invaded by the Germans and hundreds of Belgian soldiers who are being treated in English hospitals for wounds today celebrated the fete day of King Albert, who, with Queen Elizabeth, remains with the Belgian army.

This morning high mass was celebrated by [illegible] in Westminster cathedral in the presence of Cardinal Bourne. The congregation included some [illegible] Belgians. Among them were the three children of the Belgian king and queen. They are guests of Lord Curzon of Kedleston, and many other Belgian dignitaries and representatives of the British royal household.

During the day the hospitals where the Belgian wounded were cared for were visited by the [illegible] children who gave to each man some small present. [illegible] messages and simple gifts subscribed for by the Belgian refugees were sent to King Albert, Queen Elizabeth and their royal children.

France Observes Day

PARIS, Nov. 15.—France was dressed in black, yellow and red today in honor of the fete day of King Albert of Belgium. There was a great [illegible] everywhere of the people in sympathy with the heroic monarch and his subjects.

The city hall and other public edifices and most of the private buildings in Paris flew the Belgian colors and in spite of the heavy downpour of rain immense throngs attended services in the Belgian church and Notre Dame cathedral. Thousands visited the Champs Elysee and saluted a bust of King Albert and gave their mites to the Belgian relief fund.

The telegraph wires carried many official messages to King Albert expressing admiration and encouragement. Among those who sent telegrams were President Poincare, the municipal council of Paris and the authorities of every important town in France.

All Pay Tribute

By post and by special motor car service a million letters from all corners of the country not occupied by the Germans, from the [illegible] [illegible] the humblest [illegible] sent touching tributes to the Belgian monarch.

The most touching scene of the day was the special feast provided for the Belgian refugees gathered at the Cirque de Paris, where the exiles in spite of trials they have undergone assembled to celebrate the king's fete date. Many thousands of the Belgian exiles were received for lunch and dinner in private families.

The Belgian soldiers sent to Paris for a rest who are occupying the [illegible] around the fortified camp were not forgotten. Special rations were served and leave was granted them for an outing.

Kaiser Is Worried About Progress of War, Swiss Report

GENEVA, Switzerland, Nov. 15.—Emperor William, accompanied by his staff, returned Friday evening to Kolmar, 40 miles southwest of Strassburg, his starting point at the beginning of the war, according to a dispatch from Basel received here. On this occasion the town was not decorated in honor of the emperor as the populace had not been warned that he would arrive. The dispatch says the emperor appeared to be anxious and taciturn.

As an indication that care is being exercised to ward off possible attacks from hostile air craft, two powerful German aeroplanes are constantly in flight over the emperor's headquarters.

Three French aeroplanes flew across Alsace yesterday and returned to French territory after having caused all the garrisons to remain alert with their machine guns throughout the [illegible]

It is reported from Basel that [illegible] committees [illegible] formed in southern Germany with the [illegible] of the authorities [illegible] peace propaganda.

Foreigners, Without Respect to Sex or Age, Must Leave Frankfort

BERLIN, Nov. 15 (via London).—The chief of police of Frankfort on Main announces that all subjects of hostile nations including citizens of the British colonies without respect to age or sex must leave the township before November 24. They must appear before the chief of police prior to November 17 to inform him of their presence and to indicate the place to which they desire to move.

Official denial is given to the story emanating from a Russian source that the Russians between October 23 and November 5 captured 22,000 Germans together with 100 cannon and four howitzers.

STORM RAGES OVER THE BATTLEFIELD, YET ARMIES HAMMER AT EACH OTHER

Germans Make Desperate Effort to Dislodge French From Positions Around Ypres

Dixmude Veritable Death Trap for Captors, Being Bottled Up by Allies, Whose Guns Sweep All Approaches to Village; Russians and Turks Fighting in Caucasus

LONDON, Nov. 15. Soldiers fighting in the trenches, knee deep in water and swept by driving rains, is the story, which comes out of West Flanders tonight, but notwithstanding the terrible conditions of the battlefield, the German troops and the allied forces still hammer at each other with shot and shell.

That serious encounters have taken place along the Yser canal is indicated in the French official announcement that the Germans have been driven back to the right bank and that the left bank, a small section of which the Germans had held for several days, has been completely evacuated. Also to the south of Ypres, the allies have been successful in repulsing a further offensive movement. All this has been accomplished, says the French general staff, with heavy losses to the Germans.

BERLIN CLAIMS CAPTURE OF BRITISH AND FRENCH

On the other hand Berlin general headquarters notes a slight progress on the right wing and claims the capture of several hundred French and British in a preliminary encounter, and the taking of a strong French point of support in the forest of Argonne.

Another proof of the severity of the fighting which has been going on in that section where the British forces are intrenched is given in the casualty lists of November 4, 6 and 7, which have just been published at London showing the loss of 36 British officers killed, [illegible] wounded and 47 missing.

The German emperor, whose movements of late have, so far as the various reports [illegible] been somewhat [illegible], appeared on Friday at Kolmar, [illegible] miles southwest of Strassburg, according to a dispatch from Basel, Switzerland. It was [illegible] this point that the emperor proceeded [illegible] outbreak of the war and since then [illegible] time [illegible] the eastern and western theaters.

EXTENSIVE DEFENSIVE WORKS ARE ERECTED

[illegible] works have been [illegible] the [illegible] canal and the French armies are holding that line from the Belgian border south to the river Oise [illegible] forward and approach works which place them in a better position to either defense or offense.

The German report [illegible] taken a [illegible] fortified British [illegible] French [illegible] but that the unfavorable weather has impeded the progress. Concerning the fighting around Dixmude [illegible] official reports [illegible] the Germans [illegible] than they [illegible] unable to debouch from it [illegible] the Yser [illegible] night [illegible]

NEITHER SIDE ABLE TO MAKE ANY GREAT GAINS

The fact is apparent [illegible] infantry [illegible]

The Germans are strong [illegible] into a fortress, which means that if they do not succeed in advancing they intend to be prepared for a winter in Belgium. The whole coast from Ostend to the Dutch border has been placed in a state of defense and civilians are rigorously excluded from that area.

Fighting continues in East Prussia and other regions in the eastern arena between the Russians and the Germans and Austrians but without any decisive result, according to the German official statement.

RUSSIANS AND TURKS FIGHTING IN CAUCASUS

A battle of some proportions is raging on between the Russians and Turks at Kiuprukeui, [illegible] which may have a marked effect on the [illegible] world. Elsewhere [illegible] there has been [illegible] of importance.

STORM RAGES OVER BATTLEFIELD, YET BATTLE CONTINUES

weather is favorable to them, as snow is falling.

The Scandinavian countries and Holland are much exercised over the sowing of mines where they endanger neutral vessels. That the mines are in great number is shown by the fact that dozens are being driven on the Dutch coast by the prevailing storm.

Sir Gilbert Parker will question Premier Asquith tomorrow in the house of commons on this and other matters of importance to neutral countries, and it is understood that the premier will make a statement regarding the sowing of mines, the searching of neutral vessels for enemy reservists, and the treatment of shipments of oil and copper which are destined for Germany and Austria through neutral countries.

SITUATION VIEWED FROM RUSSIAN STANDPOINT

PETROGRAD, Nov. 15.—The following official communication was issued from general headquarters tonight:

"On the East Prussian front, at Stalluponen, around Angerburg and near Johannesburg, our troops are making successful progress in the fighting. The action continues in the region of Soldau and Heidenburg, where we have progressed, notwithstanding the desperate resistance of the enemy.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the battle proceeds, developing along a front from Plock (Poland) to the river Warta. On the front between Kalisz and Wielun, the enemy has withdrawn. In the neighborhood of Czenstochowa and toward the south the enemy has attempted an offensive, but this has failed.

"Our march on Cracow continues.

"In Galicia the Austrians are seeking to organize a defense on the river San in the Dounatetz region, west of the front comprising Zabno and Tarnow and on the Wisloka on the Jaslo front.

"In the region to the south of the Galician front our troops are advancing toward the passes across the Carpathians."

GIRLS IN BAD HEALTH

Hundreds of girls go to work day after day, afflicted with some ailment peculiar to their sex, dragging one foot wearily after the other, working always with one eye on the clock and wishing for closing time to come. Every such girl should rely on Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore her to a normal, healthy condition, then work will be a pleasure. For forty years this famous root and herb medicine has been pre-eminently successful in controlling the diseases of women. Why don't you try it? Adv

AUDACIOUS COULD HAVE BEEN SAVED

Olympic Musicians Tell Story of Disaster to Great Battleship

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Two men who saw the British superdreadnought Audacious lying helpless in a heavy sea some 27 miles northwest of Lough Swilly, shortly after she had struck a mine on October 27, arrived here today on the steamer New York from Liverpool.

They confirmed the stories of the loss of the warship that had previously reached here and added numerous details. One statement they made was that the Audacious might have been floating today had she not been blown up by the British cruiser Liverpool at 9 p. m. on the day she was disabled through striking the mine.

The men who told the story were James R. Beames, leader of the orchestra on the White Star liner Olympic, which rescued the crew of the Audacious and made fruitless efforts to tow the battleship to shoal water, and Hugh Griffiths, one of the orchestra's musicians.

Sworn to Secrecy.

When it became known on board the New York as she was coming into port today that Beames and Griffiths had been shifted to her from the Olympic, the musicians were asked to tell their story of the disaster. Both declined to discuss the event, declaring they had been put on their honor by the admiralty to say nothing.

Later, when they saw the positive statements that had been published here regarding the disaster to the Audacious, they admitted that the battleship had been hit by a mine and had gone down. Upon reflection, the men realized they were breaking no faith with the government inasmuch as the facts now had come to light and consented to tell what they knew.

The story of Beames, who was helped from time to time by Griffiths, was substantially as follows:

Story of Disaster.

"We sighted land at 10 a. m. on Tuesday, October 27. The land was Tory island. An hour later we went below when one of the stewards came to our quarters and said: 'You better get up on deck and see those two lovely warships.' The passengers soon got wind of the presence of war vessel and there was much uneasiness among them.

"As soon as the steward told us about the warships we ran up on deck. The day was dark and cloudy and a stiff westerly breeze was blowing. Off our starboard side we saw a big battleship down at the stern and heavy seas breaking over her. She was flying the code flag of the letter 'N,' which is a distress signal.

"As we approached, the other warship, which we learned later was the cruiser Liverpool, came over to us and at high speed crossed our bows. Hardly had she crossed when she turned and recrossed, and kept up this sort of movement for a half hour. It seemed at first as if she were trying deliberately to keep in the way of the Olympic as a means of making her stop.

Sweeping Sea for Mines.

"It was said on board later, however, that this performance was for the purpose of clearing the way for the White Star ship which at that time was the only agent in those waters capable of towing the Audacious to a shoal haven. Neither the Liverpool herself nor the small warships that had steamed to the work of rescue was capable of saving the superdreadnought.

"It was decided instantly that the Liverpool could better risk hitting a mine than could the Olympic, which was later to tow the Audacious, and for this reason the Liverpool made her maneuver ahead of the Olympic as a feeler for mines.

"Hardly had the Liverpool cut across our bow when the order was given to man the starboard lifeboats. More volunteers answered than the boats could accommodate and when it came time for action the Olympic's crew actually fought to get into the boats, so eager were the sailors to do something for the sailors on the doomed Audacious. When one of the boats hit the water they found in it a little bellboy, 11 years old, who carried messages to and from the purser's office.

Rescue Work Difficult.

"Although the starboard lifeboats were manned, Captain Haddock suddenly changed his plan. Instead of dropping down on the port side of the pounding warrior, he decided to put about and approach on the starboard side. By so doing he made a lee, which enabled the 14 lifeboats dropped from the port side to accomplish a task that never could have been done if the original plan had been carried out.

"I saw but one boat come along the stern of the superdreadnought. It had five men in it. Just as it came into position for the designated men on the Audacious to jump into it, a big wall of water pulled it up and slammed it upside down into the sea. Instantly four men came to the surface and, clutching at the buckets, hauled themselves up on the keel. One man was missing. He was the officer in command. The men had not clung long to the upturned lifeboat when another boat came bounding by and picked them up."

STREET PRAISES SPRINGS HOMES AND CLUB LIFE

and Scots; southern colonial houses built by people from the south Atlantic states; New England colonial houses built by families that have migrated from the regions of Boston and New York; one-story houses built by people from Hawaii; and a large assortment of other houses, ranging from Queen Anne to Cape Cod cottages; from Italian villas to Spanish palaces; from a Grand Trianon at Broadmoor to an amazing Tudor castle at Glen Eyrie.

The society is as cosmopolitan as the architecture. It has been drawn with perfect impartiality from the well-to-do class in all parts of the country, and has been assembled in this charming garden town with, for the most part, a common reason—to fight against tuberculosis. This does not mean, of course, that the majority of people in Colorado Springs are victims of tuberculosis, but only that, in many instances, families have moved there because of the affliction of one member.

The Clubs, for Instance.

I say "affliction." Literally, I suppose the word is justified. But perhaps the most striking thing about society in Colorado Springs is its apparent freedom from affliction. One goes to the most delightful dinner parties there, in the most delightful houses, and meets the most delightful people. Everyone seems very gay. Everyone looks well. Yet one knows that there are certain persons present who are out there for their health. The question is, which? Often it is impossible to tell.

In the case of one couple I met, I decided that the wife, who was slender and rather pale, had been the cause of migration from the east. But before I left, the stocky, ruddy husband told me, in the most cheerful manner, that he had arrived there 20 years before with "six months to live." That is the way it is out there. There is no feeling of depression. There is no air of, "Shh! Don't speak about it!" Tuberculosis is taken quite as a matter of course, and is spoken of, upon occasion, with a lightness and freedom which is likely to surprise the visitor. They even give it what one man designated as a "pet name," calling it "T. B."

Club life in Colorado Springs is highly developed. The El Paso club is not merely a good club for such a small city, but would be a very good club anywhere. One has only to penetrate as far as the cigar stand to discover that—for a club may always be known by the cigars it keeps. So, too, with the Cheyenne Mountain Country club at Broadmoor, a suburb of the Springs. It isn't one of those small-town country clubs in which, after ringing vainly for the waiter, you go out to the kitchen and find him for yourself, in his shirt sleeves and minus a collar. Nor, when he puts in an appearance, is he wearing a spotted alpaca coat that doesn't fit. Without being in the least pretentious, it is a real country club, run for men and women who know what a real club is.

Thus Is Life Plagiarizing Fiction.

When you sit at luncheon at the large round table in the men's cafe you may find yourself between a famous polo player from Meadowbrook and a bronzed young ranch owner, who will tell you that cattle rustling still goes on in his section of the country. The latter you will take for a perfect product of the west, a "gentleman cowboy" from a novel. But presently you will learn that he is a member of that almost equally fictitious thing, an "old New York family," that he has been in the west but a year or two, and that he was in "Tark's class" at Princeton.

So on around the table. One man has just arrived from Paris, another from Honolulu, or the Philippines, or China, or Japan. And when, as we were sitting there, a man came in whom I had met in Rome 10 years before, I said to myself: This is not life. It is the beginning of a short story by some disciple of Mrs. Wharton: A group of cosmopolitans seated around a table in a club. Casual mention of Bombay, Budapest and Singapore. Presently some man will flick his cigarette ash and say: "By the way, De Courcey, what ever became of the queer little chap we used to see at the officers' mess in Simla?" Whereupon De Courcey, late of the Lancers, and second son of Lord Thusandso, will light a fresh Corona and recount, according to the accepted formula, the story of "The Queer Little Chap."

I could even imagine the illustrations for the story. They would be by Wenzell, and would show us there, in the club, like a group of sleek Greek statues, clothed in full afternoon regalia of the most unbelievable smoothness—looking, in short, not at all like ourselves or anybody else.

Fate the Amateur.

However, the story of "The Queer Little Chap" was not told. That is the trouble with trying to live short stories. You can get them started sometimes, but they never work out. If the setting is all right the story somehow will not "break," whereas, on the other hand, when the surroundings are absolutely wrong, when the wrong people are present, when the conditions are absolutely impossible, your short story will break violently and without warning, and will very likely cover you with spots. The trouble is that life, in its more fragmentary departments, lacks what we call "form" and "composition." There is something amateurish about it. Nine editors out of 10 would reject a short story written by the Hand of Fate on this ground, and would probably advise Fate to go and take a course in short-story writing at some university. No; Fate has not the short-story gift. She writes novels—rather long and rambling, most of them, like those of De Morgan or Romain Rolland. But even her novels are not popular. People say they are too long. They can't be bothered reading novels which consume a whole lifetime. Besides, Fate seldom supplies a happy ending, and that's what people want nowadays. So, though Fate's novels are given away, they have no vogue.

Having somehow digressed from clubs to authorship, I may perhaps be pardoned for wandering still farther from my trail here to mention Andy Adams.

A long time ago ex-Governor Hunt expressed lack of faith in the future of Colorado Springs because, at that time, there was not much water to be found there and further because the town had too many writers of original poetry. So far as I could judge from a brief [illegible] it, [illegible] have changed. There is plenty of water, and I did not meet a single poet. However, I did meet an author, and he is a real one. Andy Adams' card proclaims him author, but more than this, his books do also. Mr. Adams, himself a former cowboy, writes cowboy stories, which prove that cowboy stories need not be as false and as maudlinly romantic as most cowboy stories manage to be. You don't have to know the plains to know that Mr. Adams' tales are true, any more than you have to know anatomy to realize that a man can't stand without a backbone.

This Writer Fellow Named Adams.

I have not read all his books, but so far as I have read, I have not found one false note. I have come upon no "lone horseman" riding through the gulch at eventide. I have not encountered the daughter of an eastern millionaire who has ridden out to see the sunset. Nor have I stumbled on a romantic meeting or a theatrical rescue.

So far as I know, Mr. Adams' book, "The Log of a Cowboy," is preeminently the classic of the plains. One of its greatest qualities is that of ceaseless movement. Three thousand head of cattle are driven through those chapters, from the Mexican frontier to the Canada border, and those cattle travel with a flow as irresistible as the unrelenting flow of De Quincey's Tartar tribe.

The author is one of those absolutely basic things, a natural story teller, and the admirable simplicity of his writing springs not from education ("All the schooling I ever had I picked up at a crossroads country schoolhouse"), not from an academic knowledge of "literature," but from primary qualities in his own nature and the strong, ingenuous outlook of his own two eyes.

Why a Rough Life Is.

When writing of clubs I should have mentioned the Cooking club, which is one of the most unique little clubs of the country. The 12 members are the gourmets of Colorado Springs—not merely passive gourmets, who like to have good things set before them, but active ones who know how to prepare good things as well as eat them. Every little while, throughout the season, the Cooking club gives a dinner, to which each member may invite a guest or two. Every member takes his turn in acting as host, his duties upon this occasion being to draw up the menu, supply materials, appoint certain men to prepare certain courses, and, wearing the full regalia of a chef, superintend the preparation of the meal, which is cooked entirely by members. Wine is not served at Cooking club dinners, the official beverage being the club Rum Brew, which has a considerable local reputation, and is, everywhere pronounced adequate. Not a few of the members learned to cook in the course of prospecting tours in the mountains, and the easterner who, with this fact in mind, attends a Cooking club dinner, is led to revise, immediately, his preconceived ideas of the hard life of the prospector. No man has a hard life who can cook himself such dishes. Indeed, one is forced to the conclusion that Colorado is full of undiscovered mines, which would have been uncovered long ago were it not that prospectors go up into the mountains for the primary purpose of cooking themselves the most delightful meals, and that mining is—as indeed it should be—a mere side issue. For myself, while I have no taste for the hardy life of the mountaineer, I would gladly become a prospector even if it were guaranteed in advance that I should discover nothing, providing that Eugene P. Shove would go along with me and make the biscuits.

Preparing to Describe a Wonder.

Aside from its clubs Colorado Springs has all the other things which go to the making of a pleasant city. The Burns theater is a model of what a theater should be. The Antlers hotel would do credit to the shores of Lake Lucerne. Where the "antlers" part of it comes in I am unable to say, but as nothing else was lacking, from the kitchen downstairs to Pikes Peak looming up in the back yard, I have no complaint to make. I suppose that everyone who has heard of Colorado Springs at all associates it with the famous Garden of the Gods.

Before I started on my travels I was aware of the fact that the two great natural wonders of the east are Niagara Falls and the insular New Yorker. I knew that the great, gorgeous, glittering galaxy of American wonders was, however, in the west, but the location and character of them was somewhat vague in my mind. I knew, of course, that Pikes Peak was a large mountain. I knew that the giant redwoods were in California. But for the rest I had the Grand Canon, the Royal Gorge and the Garden of the Gods associated in my mind together as rival attractions. I do not know why this was so, excepting that I had been living on Manhattan island, where information on such subjects is notoriously scarce. Now though I saw the Royal Gorge, though I rode through it in the cab of a locomotive, with my hair standing on end, and though I found it as advertised, I have no idea of trying to describe it, more than to say that it is a great cleft in the pink rocks, through which run a river and a railroad track, and that how the latter manages to keep out of the former was a matter of constant wonder to me as I traveled through. I defy anyone to describe the gorge.

As for the Grand Canon of the Colorado, it affects those who behold it with a kind of literary asthma. They desire to describe it; some try, passionately, but they only wheeze and look as though they might explode. Since it is generally admitted that no one who has seen it can describe it, the task would manifestly devolve upon someone who has not seen it, and that requirement is filled by me. I have not seen it. I am not impressed by it at all. I am able to speak of it with coherence and restraint. But even that I shall not do.

Describing It.

With the Garden of the Gods it is different. The place irritated me. For if ever any spot was outrageously over-named, it is that one. As a little park in the Catskills it might be all well enough, but as a natural wonder in the Rocky mountains, with Pikes Peak hanging overhead, it is a pale-pink joke. If I had my way, I should take its wonder name away from it, for the name is too fine to waste, and a thousand spots in Colorado are more worthy of it.

The entrance to the place, between two tall, rose-colored standstone rocks, may perhaps be called imposing; the rest of it might better be described as imposition. Guides will take you through, and they will do their utmost—as guides always do—to make you imagine that you are really seeing something. They will point out inane formations in the sandstone rock, and will attempt to make you see that these are "pictures." They will show you the Kissing Camels, the Bear and Seal, the Buffalo, the Bride and Groom, the Preacher, the Scotsman, Punch and Judy, the Washerwoman, and other rock forms, sculptured by Nature into shapes more or less suggesting the various objects mentioned. But what if they do? To look at such accidentals is a pastime about as intelligent as looking for pictures in the moon, or in the patterns of the paper on your wall. As nearly as Nature can be altogether silly, she has been silly here, and I think that only silly people will succeed in finding fascination in the place, the more so since Colorado Springs is a prohibition town. The story of prohibition there is curious. In 1870 N. C. Meeker, agricultural editor of the New York Tribune under Horace Greeley, started a colony in Colorado, bringing a number of settlers from the east, and naming the place Greeley. With a view to eliminating the roughness characteristic of frontier towns in those days, Mr. Meeker made Greeley a prohibition colony.

Two Pioneers Who Were Not Thirsty.

When, a year after, Gen. William J. Palmer and his associates started to build the Denver & Rio Grande railroad from Denver to Colorado Springs, a land company was formed, subsidiary to the railway project, and desert property was purchased on the present site of the Springs. The town was then laid out and the land retailed to individuals of "good moral character and strict, temperate habits."

In each deed given by the land company there was incorporated an anti-liquor clause, whereby, in the event of intoxicating liquors being "manufactured, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any place of public resort on the premises," the deed should become void and the property revert to the company. Shortly after the formation of the colony the validity of this clause was tested. The suit was finally carried to the United States supreme court, where the rights of the company, under the prohibition clause, were upheld.

General Palmer later, in discussing the history of Colorado Springs, explained that the prohibitory clause was not inserted in the deeds for moral reasons, but that "the aim was intensely practical—to create a habitable and successful town." He and his associates had had ample experience of new western railroad towns, and wished to eliminate the disagreeable features of such towns from Colorado Springs. Even then, though the prohibition movement had not been fairly launched in this country, these practical men recognized the fact that Meeker had recognized—namely, that with saloons, dance halls and gambling places, gun fighting and lynchings went hand in hand.

One of the Homeric Generation.

It is recorded that the restriction seemed to work against the town at first, but, on the other hand, such growth as there was, was substantial, and Colorado Springs attracted a better class of settlers than the wide-open towns near by. The wisdom of prohibition is amply proved today by a comparison of Colorado Springs with the neighboring town of Colorado City, which has not had the same restriction.

Even before Colorado Springs existed, General Palmer had fallen in love with the place and determined that he would some day have a home at the foot of the mountains in that neighborhood. In the early '70s he purchased a superb canon a few miles west of the city and the Tudor castle which he built there and which he named Glen Eyrie, because of the eagles' nests on the walls of his canon, remaining today one of the most remarkable houses on this continent.

Every detail of the house as it stands and every item in the history of its construction expresses the force and originality which were such strong attributes of its late proprietor.

The general was an engineer. In the Civil war he was colonel of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, and was breveted a general. After the war he went into the west and became a railroad builder. Evidently he was one of those men, typical of his time, who seem to have had a craving to condense into one lifetime the experiences and achievements of several.

Manufacturing an Antique.

General Palmer was, so to speak, his own ancestor and his own descendant. There were, in effect, three generations of him: soldier, railroad builder and landed baron. In his castle at Glen Eyrie one senses very strongly this baronial quality. Clearly the general could not be content with a mere modern house. He wanted a castle, and, above all, an old castle. And, as Colorado is peculiarly free of old castles, he had to build one for himself. That is what he did, and the superb initiative of the man is again reflected in the means he used. The house must be of old lichen-covered stone, but, being already past middle age, the general could not wait on Nature. Therefore, he caused the whole region to be scoured for flat, weathered stones which could be cut for his purpose. These he transported to his glen, where they were carefully shaped and set in place, so that the moment the new wall was up it was an old wall. Finding the flat stones was easy, however, compared with finding those presenting a natural right angle for the corners of the house. Nevertheless, all were fortunately discovered and set in place and the desired result attained. After the house was done the general thought the roof lacked just the proper note of color, so he caused it to be torn off and replaced with tiles from an old church in England.

Perhaps the most splendid thing about the house is an enormous Tudor hall, paneled in oak, with a gallery and a beamed barrel ceiling, but there are other features which make the house unusual. On the roof is a great gong bell, which can be heard for miles, and which was used to call the general's guests home for meals. There is a secret place, a swimming pool, a complicated device for recording meteorological conditions in the mountains. And, of course, there are fireplaces in which great logs were burned; yet there are no chimneys on the house. The general did not want chimneys issuing smoke into his canon, so he simply did not have them. Instead, he constructed a tunnel which runs up the mountainside behind the house and takes care of the smoke, emitting it at an unseen point far above.

Architecture and Works of God

Meanwhile the general played Santa Claus to Colorado Springs, giving her parks and boulevards. One day, while riding on his place, he was thrown from his horse and a vertebra was fractured, with the result that he was permanently prostrated. After that he lay for some time like a wounded eagle in his eyrie, his mind as active as ever. He was still living in 1907 when the time for the annual reunion of his old regiment came around. Unable to go east, he invited the remaining veterans to come to him by special train as his guests. So they came, the remnants of that old cavalry regiment, and passed in review for the last time, before their colonel.

In its mountain setting, with the pink sandstone cliffs rising abruptly behind it, this castle of the general's is one of the most dramatic homes I have ever seen. There is a sort of superb austerity about it which makes it very different from the large homes at Broadmoor, on the other side of Colorado Springs.

Among the latter the house of houses is "El Pomar," the residence of the late Ashton H. Potter. I do not know a house in the United States which fits its setting better than this one, or which is a more perfect thing from every point of view. It is a one-story building of Spanish architecture—a style which, to my mind, fits better than any other the sort of landscape in which plains and mountains meet.

Architecture cannot compete with the Rocky mountains; the best thing it can do is to submit to them; to blend itself into the picture as unostentatiously as possible. And that is what "El Pomar" does.

One day, during our stay at Colorado Springs, we were invited to make a trip to Cripple Creek. We [illegible] Driving to the station [illegible] a little [illegible] road. It is an unbelievable railroad—the Cripple Creek Short Line. It travels 40 miles to make what, in a straight line, would be 18. If there is, on the entire system, 100 yards of track without a turn, I did not see the place. We were always turning, always turning upward. We would go into a tunnel and presently emerge at a point which seemed to be directly above the place where we had entered, and at times our windings, our doublings back, our writhings, were [illegible] that I began to fear our train would get tied in a knot and be unable to proceed.

BRITISH NAVAL REVERSES

WHAT has become of the vaunted invincibility of the British navy? Why are its craft fast finding their way to the bottom, without first bringing destruction to the enemy? True, the British fleet still maintains its supremacy, but obviously only because of its superior numbers. Britannia still rules the wave, and of course "Britons never will be slaves"—but just the same the Germans are giving them food for sober reflection as to whether their supremacy on the seas can be maintained.

There have been no important naval engagements since the war began—that is, no pitched battles between fleets such as might be expected to have decisive results. The British have kept the Germans securely bottled up in the Baltic Sea and the mouth of the Elbe. This has been of vast importance to the allied cause, for without it there could have been no British control of the sea with all it means. England has been able to maintain its foreign commerce almost without interruption, which means the adequate provisioning of France as well as of England itself. She has transported many thousands of troops from Canada and India, which would have been impossible if the German navy controlled the sea.

Nevertheless there have been many minor naval engagements in which the Kaiser's forces have triumphed with surprising regularity. The cruisers Hogue, Cressy and Aboukir were antiquated vessels, it is true; all three had been ordered to the junk heap just before the war began, and were replaced in service merely to perform guard duty. But their destruction by a single German submarine cost the lives of hundreds of British tars and produced a tremendous moral effect the world over.

* * * * *

The operations of the cruisers Emden and Koenigsberg, now happily ended, inflicted millions of damage on British shipping in the Pacific and Indian oceans and likewise enhanced German naval prestige. The destruction of a powerful British fleet by a German squadron off the coast of Chile is another severe loss. And now comes news of the loss two weeks ago of one of the newest and most powerful of the super-dreadnoughts, the Audacious, sunk by a German mine or by torpedo attack.

The list is augmented by a number of destroyers, converted cruisers and other war craft of various types which have been lost in the last three months. Meanwhile the damage inflicted on the German navy by their enemies is relatively unimportant.

Remembering the absolute confidence which the whole British nation places in its fleet; remembering, more particularly, that the very existence of the empire and even of England itself as an independent nation, now depends on its ability to retain control of the seas and thus repel invasion—remembering these vital facts, it is nothing less than marvelous that the English people maintain their composure. True, they have the assurance of Mr. Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, that the fleet is stronger today, despite its losses, than when the war began; and that England will continue to turn out new ships three times as fast as Germany can add to her fleet. It is likewise true that so far only one vessel of the first class has been destroyed, the Audacious.

* * * * *

But suppose the Germans keep up their gait? The avowed policy of the German admiralty is to conduct a guerilla warfare on the seas, gradually reducing the enemy's strength by submarine and torpedo attacks until they consider it safe to try conclusions in pitched battles between the heavy fighting craft. Meanwhile they are content to keep their battleships and cruisers in the Baltic and the mouth of the Elbe, protected from the blockaders by mines, destroyers and submarines. If they can continue to sink an occasional Britisher as they have been doing this plan will eventually succeed. And if they give as good accounts of themselves in other pitched battles as they did off the coast of Chile it means that the control of the sea is far from being assured to the British.

Of course the British naval program has not been made public, further than the fact that the German coast will continue to be tightly blockaded. Doubtless the British admiralty knows what it is doing, and believes that it is acting wisely in adhering to the policy of watchful waiting. Nevertheless it is easy to imagine the wave of enthusiasm that would sweep the British empire, and several other nations, too, if Admiral Jellicoe could report a victory as complete and conclusive as that won by Dewey at Manila Bay, or by Sampson and Schley at Santiago.

WE ARE STILL A DEMOCRACY

IMAGINE this happening in a European metropolis: The ruler of the nation takes a leisurely stroll down a crowded street; stops to listen to a Salvation Army meeting, then to a crackerbox orator, and finally to a suffrage speaker. The crowd recognizes and follows him, cheering vigorously. To get away from them the exalted personage hails a public bus and drives to his friend's home—and that ends it.

Even in times of peace the Czar, the Kaiser, the King of England or the President of France would be afraid to appear in public without a troop of cavalry as a guard. His admirers must do their cheering from behind a row of bayonets. Imagine the Lord's Anointed walking the streets of Petrograd with a friend, a mere civilian, without title or official position, and unaccompanied by a military guard! Imagine the gentleman who calls himself the partner of God doing anything of the sort in Berlin! Or even the amiable King George, who, though he talks volubly of "my empire," "my army," "my government," etc., possesses not a tithe of the actual power of the President of the United States.

After all, there are plenty of points in which a casual comparison of our government with those of Europe reveals nothing to be ashamed of. Not the least of them is that the President—actually the most potent ruler in the world, with the possible exception of the Czar—can walk the streets whenever he wants to, look in the show windows, listen to the Salvation Army and enjoy himself generally, without a regiment of cavalrymen to hold the dear people at a safe distance.

THE DEATH OF LORD ROBERTS

THE death of Lord Roberts is a severe blow to the British nation, but fortunately it is not the loss in a military sense that it would have been had it occurred twenty, or even twelve years ago. For nearly a half century England depended on "Bobs," as he was affectionately nicknamed, as its chief preserver of peace throughout its far-flung dominions. He made its army invincible against rebellious hordes in Asia and Africa and won for himself such military renown as to elicit praise as the greatest living soldier, from even the German Kaiser.

But Lord Roberts reached the ripe old age of 82 and his place as head of the British military organization had long been taken by Lord Kitchener, and, in lesser degree, by Sir John French. Military critics rank Kitchener at least as high as Roberts in every respect, and most of them consider him superior as an organizer. Lord Roberts, because of his age, had taken no active part in the present war, and his passing will make no change in the military organization. But the high regard in which he was held, by both people and government, makes his death an occasion of deepest sorrow throughout the British empire, akin to the feeling in this country after the death of General Grant.

PATRONIZING HOME TALENT.

From the Kingman, Ariz., Our Mineral Wealth.

Not for a long time has there been so much interest in a case before a Kingman court as was displayed this week in the charge against Mrs. Lillie Augustine of firing five bullets into the "fracus" of her former husband, Robt. Grey. The prosecuting witness, Mr. Grey, made no special effort to prosecute, but the bullet holes in his frame were reminders that some one had been taking unusual liberties with him, even if his former shipmate was not the guilty one. The jury took four ballots before arriving at a verdict of not guilty, but at no time during the balloting was there a doubt what the verdict would be; the jury holding that the shooting occurred while the defendant was laboring under great excitement caused by altercation with the plaintiff. The verdict of not guilty seemed to have met the approval of all present, as well as those on the outside, who only had heard portions of the domestic infelicity. The defendant, Mrs. Augustine, has agreed to go the even tenor of her way and shoot no more, without unbearable provocation.

This case forcibly brings to the mind of the people of this berg that their home lawyers are just as brilliant, able and as well versed in the jumbled up Arizona Statutes, called Law, as the outside haymakers, who have been running in here and grabbing all the big legal business that properly belongs at home. Make a mark of that.

On Not Being Lazy Enough

BY RUTH CAMERON

"I'd never put any money into a labor saving device for housekeeping," a business man said to me the other day when we were discussing the question of household efficiency.

"Why?" I asked.

"The average woman doesn't want labor saving devices," he said.

"Why?" I pursued.

He shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know why, but she doesn't."

Now I think this accusation must be true, for its author is a man with a wide knowledge of the manufacturing interests, and when he says such a thing it means something. But why is it so?

Why shouldn't housekeepers welcome with eagerness and open arms anything that lightens the routine part of their work. One answer might be that few women can afford such devices, but my informant assured me that that is not the solution. Again and again, efforts have been made to introduce labor saving devices into homes where comforts and even luxuries abound—and have failed.

I have thought a great deal on the subject, but to little effect, until a day or two ago when I was talking to another business man, and he told me he had just been calling down one of his foremen for not being lazy enough.

"Martin's a glutton for work," he said. "He hasn't a lazy bone in his body, and consequently he never tries to save himself. I told him if he were a little lazier he'd try to think out ways to save himself, and we'd all be the gainers in the end."

Now may this not be just what is wrong with the average housekeeper—that she isn't lazy enough.

She has been accustomed for centuries to working long hours. "Man's work's from sun to sun, woman's work's never done." She has been accustomed to spending infinite time and strength on details and her training has made her not lazy enough physically and too lazy mentally to rebel and find the way out.

Put a woman to work with a tool which is out of kilter and she will patiently plod along day after day, overcoming its inefficiency by spending more time upon her task.

Put a man to work with the same tool and he will be so impatient and exasperated that he will not do his work until he has fixed that tool and then he will save the time spent a hundred times over.

Patience is the armor of womankind, but is an armor that sometimes keeps out good things as well as bad.

There is a time to be patient with existing conditions and a time to rise up and change those conditions for the better.

The stigma of laziness has always been a good housekeeper's greatest horror. I wonder what she will say to the accusation that she is not lazy enough.

REIMS.

Reims, which was inadvertently stepped upon by the German army during its September retreat, is an aged and decrepit city of 100,000 people which has been doing business in the same spot for over 2,000 years and which looks it in some places.

It is situated north of Paris, two hours by railroad and apparently several years by German army and is the Lowell of France, about 25,000 of its people working in the cloth industries.

Reims has fine boulevards and modern buildings, but the tourists do not flock to see these. It is more famous for its ancient French houses leaning towards each other on streets which are mere slits in the sky at the top; and it also have a cathedral which is one of the most magnificent pieces of sandstone pottery in existence. Thousands of workmen labored for years to carve fauna and flora as well as saints and sinners all over the church, inside and out and its soaring proportions are so graceful and elegant that modern architects become silent and humble when they look at it. However, nothing can make a modern cannoneer modest or humble. The Germans took a few shots at the venerable old church with an up-to-date cannon as big as a subway and made rubbish out of a good deal of it. This was a great misfortune to history and art, but will, in the end, be most profitable to Reims. A cathedral with shot holes in it is much more valuable from a tourist's standpoint than a perfect specimen and the Germans shot several million dollars' worth of value into the great structure from a commercial standpoint.

The Germans took a few shots at this venerable old church and made rubbish out of a good deal of it.

Reims has a long and contested history and has entertained most of the most prominent trouble-makers of Europe. The Russians captured it from the Remi and Attila the Hun burned it; Clovis, the original Frenchman, was baptized there; Charlemagne hobnobbed with the pope in the village hotel and numbers of French kings were crowned there and afterward filed away under the floor of the cathedral when no longer alive enough to reign.

Thus it will be seen that entertaining royalty is no novelty to Reims, and if Emperor Wilhelm chances to stop there during his French enterprise the town will doubtless receive him with a calmness which will almost amount to a lack of enthusiasm. As a matter of fact, it would much rather entertain a modest American tourist with a capacious letter of credit.

New Dreadnought California May Be Electrically Driven

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The superdreadnought California, one of the three huge new ships just ordered, will be driven by electric motors. Secretary Daniels authorized this type of power plant for the big fighter today on recommendation of Rear Admiral R. S. Griffin, engineer-in-chief of the navy. If it proves as great a success in the battleship as it has in the naval collier Jupiter, naval officers foresee the complete displacement of direct steam drive in future American warships.

The California, which will be built at the New York navy yard, will be the first electrically driven warship ever built.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

An epidemic of foot and mouth disease is at present prevailing in southwestern Michigan and northwestern Indiana. As this is a dairy district, and as foot and mouth disease can be transmitted to the human subject by milk, butter and cheese, the disease is of interest to the readers of this column.

Foot and mouth disease is a malady of cloven-footed animals. It belongs in Europe. Rosenau tells us that it has invaded this country on five occasions prior to this. The last invasion prior to this was in 1908, at which time it caused great loss around Philadelphia and Detroit.

When the disease was discovered the bureau of animal industry took active charge of the invaded districts, and within a few weeks the disease was under control. Its complete suppression necessitated the killing of a large number of cows, and was done at great expense.

In this epidemic the same bureau assumed charge as soon as the diagnosis was made, and the situation is being handled in its usual masterly way. The disease will shortly be under control and before long it will be eradicated, but the expense to farmers and to governments will be great.

The cause of the disease is a microbe too small to be seen with any microscope. It passes through the pores of a porcelain filter, and therefore it is classed as a filterable virus. This was the first ultramicroscopic filterable virus to be discovered.

The virus can be transmitted to human beings by the milk. Although the disease in animals is violent and often fatal, in the human subject it is mild. It occasionally produces death.

Children sick with foot and mouth disease have fever and vomiting; small blisters appear in the mouth; swallowing is difficult; sometimes slight blisters appear on the fingers.

Rosenau says: "Man is infected through the ingestion of raw milk, buttermilk, butter, cheese, and whey from animals suffering with foot and mouth disease. It may also, though more rarely, be transmitted directly from the salivary secretions."

Rosenau also says that foot and mouth disease cannot be transmitted by vaccination or any other variety of skin wound.

The virus is easily killed by heat. Experiments made in Denmark and Germany have proved this. Milk pas-

Nine Gospel Teams Hold Meetings in the County

Nine gospel teams, two of them accompanied by male quartets, left Colorado Springs yesterday morning to hold meetings in various parts of the county. At Bracket Creek, where team No. 16 conducted the meeting, it was stated that plans are being made for a big Thanksgiving celebration as a result of the success of the meetings held during last week, when 30 conversions were secured.

Other teams visited the following places: No. 7, Monument; No. 1, Wayne; No. 19, Miami; No. 14, Peyton; No. 11, Ramah; No. 21, Table Rock; No. 20, Elbert and Eastonville; No. 15, Roswell.

These assignments have been made for next Sunday: Team No. 5, Evergreen; No. 16, Greenway and Prairie View; No. 26, Eastonville; No. 24, Ramah. Another team will be sent to Husted.

Members of the teams, ministers and Sunday school superintendents will meet at the Y. M. C. A. next Thursday at 7, instead of 7:30 o'clock, as announced.

$1,000,000 WORTH OF DYESTUFF FROM GERMANY

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—More than a million dollars' worth of dyestuffs from Germany were brought into port today by the American steamer Matanzas. Joyful Anticipation of Motherhood

There is apt to be a latent apprehension of distress to mar the complete joy of expectation. But this is quite overcome by the advice of so many women to use "Mother's Friend." This is an external application designed to so lubricate the muscles and to thus so relieve the pressure reacting on the nerves, that the natural strain upon the cords and ligaments is not accompanied by those severe pains said to cause nausea, morning sickness and many local distresses.

Many people believe that those remedies which have stood the test of time, that have been put to every trial under the varying conditions of age, weight, general health, etc., may be safely relied upon. And judging by the fact that "Mother's Friend" has been in continual use since our grandmother's earlier years and is known throughout the United States it may be easily inferred that it is something that women gladly recommend.

"Mother's Friend" is prepared only in our own laboratory and is sold by druggists everywhere. Ask for a bottle to-day and write for a special book for expectant mothers. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 201 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

BE CAREFUL OF STARTING FIRES IN THE MOUNTAINS

Underbrush Dry as Tinder and Hikers Are Warned Not to Leave Sparks; Many Small Blazes Recently

Campers and hikers in the mountains at this time of the year can, through carelessness, cause losses of thousands of dollars by starting fires. And, because of the perfect weather and the consequently large number of outing parties, such fires quite likely will be started unless extraordinary precaution is exercised.

Since midsummer there has been scarcely any rain and no heavy storms. The timber and undergrowth is dry as tinder, and but a spark is needed to ignite it. A match or burning cigarette or cigar stub tossed to one side, a neglected camp fire or a smoldering one fanned to flame by the winds—any one of these can be the cause of a forest fire of no mean proportion.

During the last week there have been many small fires in the foothills and on the mesas, probably caused by sparks from locomotives. While, unless the extraordinary happens, no great damage can come from them, they but go to show how easily more serious conflagrations could be started.

Issue Many Warnings.

The trustees of the Stratton estate some time ago issued an appeal to hikers to be careful with fire. Several small blazes had been started in Stratton park by careless smokers. The park commission has repeatedly requested hikers to take particular pains to extinguish all fires before leaving camping grounds in city parks. The forest service issues special bulletins and warnings on fires in mountain forests every few weeks.

The Stratton estate trustees and park commission make the request with a two-fold purpose—to prevent so far as possible all financial loss and to preserve the natural beauty of the parks. A fire could easily lay waste the entire park or North or South Cheyenne canon; and, once bare, it would require years for the dense growth to be replaced.

The forest service is thinking of the conservation policy. With the slopes bare, it would be almost impossible to conserve an adequate water supply, and floods would not be uncommon. Also, years have been spent in clearing the national forests and starting new growths.

So, all of them—park commission officials, Stratton estate trustees and forest service officers—have asked that particular care be paid to fire by people hiking in the mountains. It is a question of dollars and cents and the natural beauty of the Pikes Peak region.

'SEE AMERICA NOW' PLANS FEATURE COLO. SPRINGS

Omaha Paper, in Conjunction With Others, Boosts Colorado Scenic Resorts

The Pikes Peak region is receiving a great deal of advertising throughout the country in the "See America Now" editions of various newspapers. In a recent issue of the Omaha World-Herald, this city and the surrounding region is given considerable space and a large picture of the Garden of the Gods and Pikes Peak.

The article in part follows:

"Or finally one may go south to Colorado Springs, the gateway to the most popular of Colorado's scenic delights. Half an hour's ride distant is Manitou, nestling down in a narrow valley. Its one real street as crooked as a corkscrew, because, perforce, it couldn't be straight without running into a mountain. To one side, en route to Manitou, is the Garden of the Gods, where great rocks, hundreds of tons in weight, are fantastically shaped by nature to resemble steamboats, camels, bears, Indians and other interesting things. This is really one of the most striking scenes in all Colorado.

Then Pikes Peak.

And beyond Manitou the famous cogwheel railroad climbs Pikes Peak, king of all the Rockies. Towering like a super-giant among giants, Pikes Peak outtops them all. From its snow-clad summit one may scan the horizon and yet no other its equal, and if one's vision were a thousand-fold greater, the same thing would still be true.

But back to Colorado Springs passing by with a mere mention, the wonderful Cave of the Winds, Ute Pass, Mount Manitou, Crystal Park and the hundred other points lying about Manitou. From Colorado Springs one may go by either of two railroads or by automobile, if one has the price, to Cripple Creek, probably the most famous mining center in all Colorado—and no one should leave Cripple Creek off the schedule.

The Prospect Holes.

From the hills about the town one may look over a great valley, which looks as though it were a series of big ant hills. Here and there and everywhere the little mounds of earth, each beside the hole from which they were taken, tell a story of blasted human hopes, for every one was the "prospect" of some miner who hoped to find wealth unfigured. And scattered about—perhaps half a dozen in sight at one time—are the great mines, the few of all the prospects which developed "pay streaks," mines which have made multimillionaires, and which are still making them.

METHODISTS GO WITHOUT DINNERS TO HELP BELGIANS

Raise $67.79 for Fund by Having Single Sunday Fare; Rev. Smith Gives Address

By going without their Sunday dinners the members of the First Methodist church yesterday raised $67.79 for Belgian war sufferers, as the result of collections taken in the church. The money will be telegraphed to the Belgian relief committee in New York this morning to be cabled on to Europe as soon as possible.

The Rev. Merle N. Smith, pastor of the church, preached the opening sermon of the "Go to Church" campaign, which was inaugurated by the brotherhood of the First Methodist church last week, taking as his subject "Your King Needs You," the recruiting slogan of the British empire. The musical prelude commenced at 7:15 o'clock, a crowd of interested spectators filling the church. Dr. Smith called attention to the fact that the subjects of Christ were needed to die for the cause of religion, as much as the subjects of King George of England were needed to perish in the defense of their nation.

The campaign will be continued with a series of special sermons along these lines next Sunday morning and evening.

A number of South American countries are prejudiced against American-made goods because of the inferior packing of shipments from this country.

Musicians' Charity Ball Wednesday—'Dollar Day'

As a closing event of the "big" day this week, Wednesday—"Dollar Day"—will come the charity ball of the Colorado Springs Musicians' Protective union, which will be held at Simpson's hall on Bijou street. The last ball given by the musicians was in this hall, which is particularly well adapted to the occasion, having large floor space and provision at each end of the ballroom for the two orchestras that are the feature of the evening.

The latter is what makes the musicians' ball unique among similar affairs. Two orchestras, each of 10 or 12 men, are selected for the best of musical talent in the city some time before the event—the two orchestras for Wednesday have been in rehearsal for several weeks, it is said—and there is keen rivalry for the favor of the dancers. One specializes on the two-steps and the other on the waltzes, which together form the principal part of modern dance programs, and thus each is enabled to keep a perfect tempo. Directly one orchestra finishes a number, the other starts the following one, giving a program containing nearly twice as many dances as at an ordinary ball.

The charities of the Colorado Springs Musicians' Protective union, which is a branch of the American Federation of Musicians, are extensive and growing more numerous each year. The charity balls it gives are the only appeal made outside the organization for funds, and these without doubt are more of a case of "value received" than even with more elaborately planned functions. Members of the union give their services to furnish the music and to attend to all the arrangements, so the net proceeds are correspondingly greater.

The "Dollar Day" charity ball is in charge of a committee consisting of F. G. Fink and D. E. Rawley. It is hoped to make this even more successful than the annual balls given by the musicians. Tickets have been distributed among the members of the union and may be obtained from them today, tomorrow and Wednesday.

Deaths and Funerals

Ruth Irene Johnson, the 15-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Johnson, died at her home, 643 East Willamette street, yesterday. The body is at the Hallett & Baker undertaking rooms. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets.

These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids.

It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place.

Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "loggy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

DANDRUFF SURELY DESTOYS THE HAIR

Makes It Dull, Brittle, Lifeless, and Causes It to Fall Out.

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will be silky, fluffy, lustrous, soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails. Adv.

GERMANY DENIES BRITISH CHARGES OF MINE LAYING

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—(via The Hague and London.)—Germany's answer to the charges made by the British government regarding the methods employed by Germany in laying mines in the North sea is printed in the Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

The article asserts that the eight agreements of the second Hague conference at The Hague, which were among the conventions signed on October 18, 1907, to which the British government refers in its note to the neutral powers, never have been ratified. Nevertheless, Germany announces she will act in accordance with the terms of these agreements.

The British charge that Germany violated provisions regarding the laying of mines is absolutely denied in the article, which declares that Germany never used fishing boats or vessels flying neutral flags in laying mines, all were laid by war vessels.

Neither has Germany laid mines in the high seas. All have been laid as near to English harbor entrances as the coast lines and character of the bottom permitted; all have been carefully anchored and neutral powers have been duly informed.

It is untrue, continues the paper, that Germany has barred neutral ports by laying mines. If some of the German mines laid on the English coast have drifted to sea through heavy storms, these are much less numerous than the English mines that have been driven onto the Dutch and Belgian coasts, where they have inflicted damage.

England's charges, concludes the article, were dictated with the design of excusing England's closure of the North sea.

UNIVERSAL PROHIBITION IS COMING, SAYS MRS. BOOLE

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 15.—National prohibition by 1920 and universal prohibition within a few years more were predicted by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the New York State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in an address today before the union's national convention here. The European war, Mrs. Boole declared, would aid the struggle for prohibition on that continent. She pointed to Russia's recent antivodka order to support her prediction.

JUDGE W. P. KINNEY PRAISES CHILD LAWS

Says County Is Caring for Its Children by Useful Cooperation

Colorado has the best child-labor laws of any state in the union, in the opinion of Judge William P. Kinney, who gave an illustrated lecture last night at All Souls church, on "What El Paso County Has Done for Its Children," and, by reason of being a comparatively new state and passing stringent statutes, has prevented the evils of child labor from gaining a foothold. El Paso county is doing its part in all that pertains to the welfare of the rising generation, he said, and the public-spirited cooperation of its citizens and newspapers has done much to further the movement.

Judge Kinney first gave a resume of the work accomplished by the juvenile court. "Its policy is one of constructive importance and its aims to lift up and protect," he said. "It protects society equally as well as the old system of 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,' and tries to make worthy citizens out of offenders. Formerly the wrongdoer was considered an outcast. He was stamped with the mark of a criminal and hounded for life. The old method protected society regardless of the offender; the new method tries to ascertain the cause and reason for the crime. The policy of the juvenile court is one of prevention."

Helping the Mothers.

Girls up to 18 years and boys not over 16 are taken to the juvenile court, which is a branch of the county court; also, adults guilty of contributing to juvenile delinquency. The "Mother's Compensation Act" was the greatest help in these preventive measures, according to Judge Kinney. By this law mothers who are too poor to support themselves and their children are granted a certain amount of money to bring up their boys and girls, instead of sending them to a county or state institution, where they are away from home influences.

"When the Colorado Springs county jail confined adults and children without distinction, the results were most harmful to the young," he said. "For the children were brought into close contact with disreputable characters and could not but help absorb some of that atmosphere. Now we have the detention home to take care of the boys and girls under 14 years of age, and sometimes over. It is under the supervision of one of the most lovable matrons in the state, who has created a home atmosphere so necessary for such a place. There we take care of runaway boys, poor children, girls and sick mothers."

Praises Stratton Home.

The Stratton home for children is a recent acquisition that cannot be underestimated, in Judge Kinney's opinion. "The advantage there lies in the fact that brothers and sisters are brought up and trained together. The state school for boys, at Golden, and the girls' school at Morrison are two valuable institutions and do credit to Colorado," he said.

"At Golden the boys are taught the foundation of a trade, including lathe making, tailoring, forging, laundry work and many others. The agricultural department is one of the features of the place and all the work is done by the boys themselves. They are trained in the care of well-blooded stock and become competent farmers.

"Miss Purcell, who is at the head of the Morrison school, has founded an institution of which the state may well be proud," said Judge Kinney. "The girls are well cared for and are taught sewing, cooking and many other arts. The physical welfare of the girls is emphasized and they are given a maximum amount of outdoor exercise."

Raps Denver Newspapers.

The privacy with which the juvenile cases are treated in Colorado Springs is in welcome contrast with the undue publicity given to such cases by the Denver newspapers, according to Judge Kinney. "Publicity is the most harmful thing that can happen to a girl or boy, for they are branded abroad as criminals and made known to the public, thereby ruining their chances of future prosperity.

"Children who never before had a chance of rising from degenerate lives, now receive home treatment and are taught and trained in the duties of public citizens," he said. "We investigate the causes for their misdeeds and often find that the silent partners are far more guilty than they. When such people are caught they are given a $1,000 fine, or a year's imprisonment, or both. The people of Colorado Springs may congratulate themselves on the cooperation and help they are so liberally giving, and thereby creating a race of future citizens they may well be proud of."

COMMISSION WILL TRY TO GET AT BOTTOM OF THE COLORADO STRIKE

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—The causes of the Colorado coal miners' strike will be sought by the United States commission on industrial relations in a series of hearings to begin in Denver December 1, according to an announcement today by Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the commission.

The commission will make no effort to bring about a settlement of the strike, but will limit itself to studying the conflict in its relation to the general problem of industrial unrest. Operators, union officials, public officials, citizens and officers of the militia will be called to testify.

Questions of fact were presented to the congressional committee last spring. The commission now will undertake an interpretation of the facts, in order that it may qualify to formulate recommendations to congress for avoiding such conflicts in the future.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The woman's section of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium, cooperating with the Belgian relief committee in New York, Minnesota, California, Kansas, Iowa and Oregon, sent out an appeal today for nonperishable food.

The commission announces that in response to its preliminary appeals to a few accessible organizations, more than 600,000 women rallied within three days to the aid of the commission. Its appeal now is to all the women of America.

It is requested that the shipments, preferably in carload lots, be of any of the following: Cured or salted meats or fish, wheat, canned goods, including milk, flour, rice, beans, peas, coffee, prepared foods, cereals. These are to be sent to the women's section of the Commission for Relief in Belgium in this city with simultaneous notification of shipment. Contributions of money by check to the treasurer, Miss Anne Morgan, also will be acceptable and given due acknowledgment.

CONFERENCE CHAMPIONSHIP SQUABBLE NOW WITH US, WITH MINERS CLAIMING TITLE BECAUSE OF WIN OVER STATE

Saturday's Game With Aggies and Thanksgiving Battle With Tigers Not Considered; Plan on Foot to Submit Puzzling Question to Walter Camp, Parke Davis and Stagg

The football teams and their contingents in the Rocky Mountain athletic conference are on the verge of the biggest squabble over the 1914 championship that has ever stirred their ranks. Saturday's slim victory for the Miners over the State university eleven, which was the dope upset of the year, has put a new complexion to the situation. The Miners have gone through their season so far by defeating the Mormons, the pitifully weak Denver university team, and the Wyoming Cowboys, a team far below the collegiate standard of playing. But the Miners—or Sammy Burris, their quarterback—defeated the university team, and for this reason are claiming the championship.

Naturally, this question of the championship is going to be considered from a somewhat of a partisan standpoint. One can see this already in dispatches from Denver. In a statement prepared in Denver for publication today, the Associated Press says: "Colorado college and the Colorado Aggies have not played the Mines as yet, but they have been defeated by Colorado university and are, therefore, eliminated as championship contenders."

So it has come to this point, where the team that beats Colorado university is the state championship team, notwithstanding the fact that it has yet to play two of the strongest elevens in the conference has [illegible]. We guess not. The Miners play the Aggies next Saturday in Denver. The team is in bad condition, reports state. The Aggies have a strong team and the Miners will have to play all the football they know, according to the Tigers, who have met the Aggies. The Mines defeated Denver university 18 to 0 and the Tigers won by the score of 61 to 0. This tells a little story in itself, if one can take football scores into reckoning a title, and they probably will be used this fall.

If Aggies Beat Miners.

If the Aggies defeat the Miners and the Tigers do likewise on Thanksgiving, where the Miners will stand is not hard to see. Boulder will have a better call than the Miners, having lost but one game and having a similar percentage as the Tigers from the standpoint of games won and lost.

The Tigers want a square deal in this matter from the football writers all over the state especially Denver. It's a peculiar situation any way one looks at it. Let us presume—merely presume that the Tigers defeat the Mines here on Thanksgiving, after the Miners have won from the Aggies next Saturday. This will leave the Tigers, the Mines and Boulder tied from the standpoint of games won and lost. Boulder beat the Tigers, the Miners beat Boulder and (presuming) the Tigers beat the Mines. Which team has the best claim to the title? Some will claim that the State eleven is entitled to the championship this year because it held the title last fall and defeated the team that will defeat the Mines that defeated them—(presuming). Boulder has one game to play, that with Denver U. at Denver on Thanksgiving, but unless the student band of the Ministers is used in a contest against the Colorado U. music-makers there seems no chance for the Crimson and Gold.

Conference Doesn't Do It.

The truth of the matter is that the conference does not recognize a championship. In fact the conference does very little along this line and if its membership—consisting of professors, who are not experts along athletic lines—should take up the question, they would find a puzzle that would take them far into the night.

The championship therefore will be decided by the newspapers and the Spalding official guide book takes the word of Denver writers. Therefore the fate of the Tigers is in the hands of the Denver critics, as far as the official rule book and review is concerned.

This is a difficult problem and for the sake of fairness and to get away from partisanship it has been suggested that the sporting editors in Colorado place the matter before the best experts in the country and abide by their decision. Walter Camp, Yale's great football expert; Parke H. Davis of Princeton, recognized as the closest student of the game, and Coach A. A. Stagg of Chicago university have been suggested. It is simply a case of getting the advice of noninterested and nationally-recognized experts.

Denver Players Hurt.

Two Denver university players were seriously injured in the Tiger game. These were Beals and Deeds, both backfield men. They probably will be out of the game the rest of the season. On the other hand, the Tigers' condition is good. The team starts work this week in preparation for the Mines game, which promises to be a terrific battle, with speed predominating.

Saturday's victory by Golden was a surprise and the result is rendered more remarkable by the fact that the contest was finished with five second string men in the lineup, Captain McKnight, Hinman, Lavender and McGuire being injured. Handicapped by a light line, it was generally supposed they would be crushed by the Boulderites but speed and team work overcame brawn. An intentional safety by Hinman saved the Miners, it is said.

Another upset of this year's conference games has been the poor showing of Denver university. The Ministers have lost every game so far this year, yet early in the season, the weight and amount of football material led to the prediction they would at least be championship contenders.

The Colorado Aggies added another victory to their list Saturday by defeating the Logan Aggies in a decisive manner. This team has played consistently throughout the season and has improved in every game.

OFFICIALS SHOULD STOP ALL ROUGHING IN GAMES

Saturday's Game Replete With Unnecessary Personal Encounters; Many Decisions Were Off Color

The question of efficient officials for Rocky Mountain football games and the elimination of all roughing at the very outset of the games is one of considerable importance, and yesterday the fanning bees throughout the city severely criticized the work of the officials in Saturday's game.

Only a blind man could not see a lot of unnecessary roughing in the D. U.-C. C. game. Both sides were guilty, but the Ministers, especially the linemen, spent so much of their time in roughing tactics that they played a miserable game. There were many instances of roughing and there was not a penalty for this throughout the game. If some stringent action had been taken in the first period it might have ended the personal encounters. The work of the officials on technical football was none too good and one play, which favored the Tigers was misjudged. This came when Referee Smith gave the ball to the Tigers after a forward pass had struck inside the field of play and rolled over the line. Truscott, the head linesman, disagreed and the Denver players protested, but Smith stuck by his decision. The decision on the question of Verner's second touchdown, which was not allowed, also created considerable dissatisfaction. Smith claimed he blew his whistle before the ball struck the ground, when Morris fumbled it on a line charge. If he did he blew it too quickly.

Smith's decision on the so-called fair catch by Walter in the U. C.-C. C. game already is history. It was far off and it beat the Tigers.

These few instances show that efficient officials are needed, but more than that this roughing business must be eliminated from the conference games.

Carlisle Quarter's Condition Improves

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—"Pete" Welsch, quarterback and former captain of the Carlisle Indian eleven, whose left cheek bone was fractured in the football game with Notre Dame yesterday, had a restful day in a hospital today and physicians said his condition appeared to be improving. In addition to the fractured cheek bone there is a possible fracture of the base of the skull.

PICKED ONES WON BUT UPSETS WERE NUMEROUS IN EAST

Tigers' Strong Rally Against Yale Is Typical; Harvard Also Met Reverses

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—True football form and upsets were curiously intermingled in the games played on eastern gridirons yesterday. Where the analysis of the play is confined strictly to the regular varsity teams, the results coincided with predictions. The injection of numerous second and third string players produced, however, several features not included in the forecasts.

This applies particularly to the Yale-Princeton and the Harvard-Brown struggles, which furnished the unexpected and sensational elements of the week-end gridiron clashes. Yale, after scoring 19 points against Princeton in 45 minutes of play, thus coming within one point of Harvard's score over the same eleven one week previous, sent a line of substitutes into the final period to hold the Tigers in check. The complete failure of this maneuver was shown by the fact that the Orange and Black piled up two touchdowns and two goals in less than 10 minutes and was threatening to wrest victory from the Blue when the final call of time cut short the chances of an eleventh hour win.

Harvard, with the same idea of conserving the energies of her varsity combination for the Yale game next Saturday, sent a team composed chiefly of substitutes against Brown and the result was a no-score tie. So far as actual bearing on the outcome of the Yale-Harvard contest is concerned, these reversals of form expected can be disregarded since a wide gulf exists between the defensive strength of the first and second combinations at both New Haven and Cambridge.

The east and the west broke even in the intersectional contests of the day, Cornell defeating Michigan, 28 to 13, and Notre Dame overthrowing the Carlisle Indians 48 to 6. Aside from the consistent play by Maulbetsch, the Wolverines were outclassed by the powerful Ithaca eleven. The Indians, only a shadow of the famous teams which have made Carlisle famous in other years, were helpless before the sweeping play of the westerners and never tested the Notre Dame defense seriously.

ONLY WISCONSIN VICTORY CAN HOLD BACK ILLINOIS

Zuppke Has Turned Out Greatest Team in "Big Nine" Conference in Many Years.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—Fulfilling early season predictions and playing close to form, Illinois has won the "Big Nine" football championship, or at least has come so near winning it that only an earthquake in the form of a Wisconsin victory next Saturday can leave it in doubt.

Critics today, considering the Illinois' brilliant victory Chicago yesterday, were inclined to credit Coach Zuppke with having turned out the greatest team that Illinois, or even the conference, has seen in years.

Whatever hope Wisconsin had for championship claims was dashed in its unexpected defeat by Minnesota. Since the Gophers were decisively beaten by Illinois, there seems but little chance of the Badgers making a successful fight against Zuppke's men next Saturday.

The surprisingly strong attack taught Minnesota by Coach Williams has made the Gophers formidable in the tail end of the season and indicates a battle of interest, with second place at stake, in their game with Chicago next Saturday.

Michigan's erratic eleven apparently was bewildered by the Cornell offense and fell an easy victim after the first half, and Notre Dame, displaying the best football of its season, crushed the crippled Carlisle crowd with its fast backfield.

A. A. U. ACCEPTS THREE NEW WORLD'S RECORDS

All Marks Shattered by Coast Athletes; Union Holds Annual Meeting Today in New York

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Every division of the Amateur Athletic union was well represented here today when several of the prominent committees got together to prepare their reports, which will be presented to the delegates at the annual meeting of the union here tomorrow.

Among the new world's records accepted by the committee are the following:

Fifty-six-pound weight for height, outdoor, 16 feet 11¼ inches—P. Donovan, Pastime Athletic club, at Olympic games, San Francisco, Cal., February 20, 1914.

Running high jump, 6 feet 7 5-16 inches, outdoor—E. Beesom, Olympic club, at Berkeley, Cal., May 2, 1914.

One hundred and twenty yards, high hurdles, outdoor, 15 seconds—F. W. Kelly, University of Southern California, at Berkeley, Cal., May 10, 1913.

The marks of 21 1-5 seconds for 220 yards, by George Parker, Olympic club, at Fresno, Cal., October 2, 1914, and 9 3-5 seconds for 100 yards, by H. P. Drew, University of California, at Berkeley, Cal., March 28, 1914, were the most prominent accepted by the committee as equaling the existing records.

It is expected that President Alfred G. Lill, Jr., of Boston, will be reelected. Only one candidate, Frederick W. Rubien, president of the Metropolitan association, has been mentioned as a probable successor to the late James E. Sullivan as secretary-treasurer.

BILLY NOLAN, MAKER OF RING CHAMPIONS, OUT WITH M'FARLAND FOR ANOTHER BELT

Piloted Dane and German to Championship Am Sending Irishman That Way, He Says

By RINGSIDE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Billy Nolan, successor to the late Billy Delany, as the "maker of ring champions," is with us once more. The one-time mentor of Jim Jeffries had the enviable reputation of developing more title holders than any man in the game; while Nolan has piloted more pugilists in the championship harbor than any manager in captivity.

Nolan's success lies in the fact that by uncanny shrewdness he matched two of his charges for battles that netted them world's championships, and the attendant glory and remuneration. Nolan's first noteworthy maneuver was to inveigle Joe Gans into a match with Battling Nelson that enabled the durable Dane to wrest the lightweight championship from the colored wizard.

A few years later, when Nelson decided to become his own manager, press agent, author and various other things that Nolan attended to in time of Nelson's prosperity—Nolan having been cast aside by Nelson—Billy took a lad out of the obscurity of Cadillac, Mich., and in a few months had him matched to fight Nelson for the world's title at 133 pounds.

Ad Wolgast was that unknown and the "Michigan Wildcat" vindicated Nolan's confidence in him, when he humbled the marvelous Dane in 40 rounds of the fiercest fighting ever witnessed in any prize arena.

Now Nolan has Packey McFarland in tow. The wonderful Packey has been fighting more than 10 years, but in that time has never been engaged in a championship battle, although at times he was considered quite superior to the reigning king in his class. Always when Packey was on the verge of being matched with the champion, some unforeseen obstacle cropped up and the opportunity was lost to him.

Nolan's latest lamentation is: "I managed a Dane and a German in championships; now I am going to pilot an Irishman into a world's title."

Strange as it may seem, it is the lightweight championship that Packey McFarland is after. It has been a half dozen years since Packey was supposed to have graduated out of the lightweight class; and now the Chicagoan insists that he can make 135 pounds at 3 o'clock, as readily and with as little exertion as can the champion, Freddie Welsh.

McFarland's weight has been one of the mysteries of the ring for many years. Packey's pet aversion, when he was taking on opponents at the rate of one a week, was to scale in. It was this unwillingness on Packey's part that prompted the experts to class him in any division but that of the lightweights. It was even expected that McFarland really belonged in the middleweight class, and that Mike Gibbons should have been the object of his challenges.

But Nolan assures us now that McFarland is still a legitimate lightweight and that Patrick can make the poundage if there is enough incentive. Sufficient incentive, according to Packey, would be a match with Freddie Welsh; and the curly-haired wonder from Chicago stands ready to post a forfeit for weight.

Strange things have happened in ringdom—such as discredited boxers fighting their way to the championship, but if McFarland gets a match with Welsh and shows us that he can come anywhere within range of the lightweight mark, then all will be willing to admit that wonders will never cease.

Ad Wolgast, who strove so valiantly to regain his title from Freddie Welsh a week ago Monday, has earned more money in the ring than any lightweight in the history of the game. Adolph, who for several years, struggled along under the appellation of the "Cheese Champion" (inflicted upon him by Battling Nelson) has poured a mite over $300,000 into his coffers since he adopted boxing as a profession seven years ago.

Of this vast sum, Promoter Tom McCarey chipped in over $90,000 in the form of purses. The other coast promoter, Jim Coffroth, contributed somewhat over $80,000 in purses.

The largest lump sum Wolgast ever received for one battle was $47,000 for his fight with Jose Rivers at Vernon, Cal., July 4 two years ago. Rivers was knocked out in 13 rounds. Wolgast received $20,097 as his end of the receipts and $27,000 for his moving picture rights. The receipts totaled $43,000.

Wolgast has engaged in no less than 11 fights, in which the receipts aggregated over $25,000. Little Ad has never suffered the ignominy of a knockout, and has been floored but twice in his ring career—once when he won the title from Nelson and the other time when he lost the premier honors to Ritchie.

Adolphus has the betting fever in the most aggravated form. He never fails to back himself heavily for a fight, as he says that is the inspiration he needs to battle in his best form. In his championship battle with Nelson, Wolgast backed himself to the extent of $5,400, which he won and he lost $7,000 in wagers when he passed over the title to Ritchie.

And all this despite the fact that Wolgast's hands are brittle. The diminutive Michigander is the unluckiest first rank fighter in the game and he has lost close to $100,000 through injuries sustained just prior to big battles.

Pugilists who have seen their best days in the ring are turning to another field of endeavor to gather in the shekels. The motion picture game has countless former ringmen in its midst, but as yet not one has ascended to stardom. Generally they are to be found in the mob scene at $2.50 per diem.

Sailor Burke tried his hand at posing for the "movies" several weeks ago and quit in a huff after one day's work. He toted a spear around for a performance and upon being presented with the regulation $2.50 quit on the spot. The sailor considered his efforts more valuable and thus a star was lost to the moving picture world.

CHAVEZ AND DELMONT GO 20 TO DRAW IN JUAREZ

JUAREZ, Mexico, Nov. 15.—Benny Chavez and Gene Delmont of Memphis fought 20 rounds to a draw here this afternoon. Many of the spectators thought Delmont should have had the decision.

NEBRASKA VALLEY CHAMPION

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 15.—By defeating their historic rivals, the University of Kansas, at Lincoln, yesterday, the University of Nebraska won the Missouri valley football championship. Nebraska achieved a crushing triumph by piling up a score of five touchdowns and 35 points while the Kansans suffered the ignominy of a shutout.

DAILY NEWS
EUROPE SPENDS MILLIONS FOR WAR

Santa Fe spends millions for you

The iron tread of armies shakes Europe. The resources of the nations are bent toward providing shot, shell and powder with which to destroy each other.

America presents a different picture. She is busy preparing to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal with two peace Expositions in California at San Francisco and San Diego.

The Santa Fe has spent upwards of $2,000,000 for new equipment which will make it easy for Americans to see America. Santa Fe trains are more perfect than ever—new engines, new dining cars, new chair cars, new coaches and the [illegible] Pullman equipment.

A [illegible] of this [illegible] to YOU, Mr. A[illegible] I will be glad to tell you [illegible] Santa Fe trains and Santa Fe [illegible].

THE WAR AND THE CENTURY

"The Century Magazine" announces that, beginning with the November number, it will interpret to its readers what lies back of the bare facts of bulletin and dispatch.

In New York W. Morgan Shuster, author of "The Strangling of Persia," and Samuel P. Orth, professor of politics and public law at Cornell university, will write of the war and its effects from an economic and political point of view.

In London James Davenport Whelpley, author of "The Trade of the World," and of recent Century papers on diplomacy, will deal with the personalities of the war lords and the spirit of the nations.

Estelle Loomis, the short story writer now in Paris, will be sending The Century sketches of human interest.

Albert Bigelow Paine, author of "Mark Twain: A Biography," now in Switzerland, has put himself in touch with the German authorities with a view to presenting views of Germany in war time.

Dr. Hendrik Van Loon, historian and journalist, has gone to his native land, Holland, where he will write of the lowlands in war time.

Albert Edwards the well-known novelist and travel writer, is going to Europe with a roving commission from The Century Magazine, his mission is to help build the literature that will grow out of the war itself.

ASSOCIATED CHARITIES ANNUAL MEETING TODAY

The annual meeting of the Associated Charities will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the council chamber of the city hall. The financial report for the year will be presented and also the agent's report. There will be a discussion of the year's work and plans for the winter campaign will be outlined.

Edgar E. Hoyt Dies After Long Illness

Edgar Elliott Hoyt, only son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hoyt, died yesterday morning at the home of his parents, 218 East Espanola street. Mr. Hoyt had been ill since last May, though his condition did not become serious until recently.

Besides his parents, Mr. Hoyt is survived by his wife, a 4-year-old son, Gordon Elliott, and twin sisters, Mrs. W. I. Spicer of Dallas, Tex., and Mrs. H. L. Dwinell of Colorado Springs.

Mr. Hoyt was born in Halstead, Kan., October 29, 1883, and was brought to this city by his parents in 1887. He attended grade and high schools here, later going to Salt Lake City, where he became engaged in the insurance business with Gordon Fuller. While in Salt Lake he married Miss Mabel Frees, August 22, 1909. Mr. Hoyt at one time was associated with the Pond Realty company of this city.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

700 Attended Prayer Meetings Last Week

About 150 Colorado Springs business men attended the closing service of the week of prayer yesterday afternoon at the Princess theater. The Rev. R. A. Pollock addressed the meeting and took for his subject, "Heart Throbs from Galilee." His talk was interesting and applied both to religious and business life. The service ended with an evangelistic appeal. A solo by H. C. Schneider preceded the song service.

More than 700 business men and business women of this city have attended meetings during the week of prayer, which was conducted under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Similar services have been held by associations in all parts of the world.

Arthur Rounch, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., will speak at a meeting of the association next Sunday.

What the Press Agents Say

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

Today at the Empress the twenty-second episode of this famous mystery study will be shown, it's the last episode. The story closes, have you solved it? This, the last of this series, is more interesting, more thrilling, more tensely dramatic than all of the others. The climax of the story is reached and the "Black Hundred" have reached the end of the rope, all of their schemes have failed and the price must be paid.

"Seeds of Jealousy," a Princess single-reel, is also a feature that you should not miss. It's a worth-while story.

"Ethel's Roof Party," a Komic, being chapter 10 of the famous "Bill the Office Boy" series. The story:

Taking advantage of the boss's absence, Ethel decides to give a luncheon on the roof. Bill and his pal make up their minds that they should be included in the invitation, so they mount to the roof where Ethel and her guests are assembled. The hostess is not at all pleased at Bill's butting in, and at her request her male friends put the office boy and his chum off the roof and lock them out. Bill determines to give them a scare. So after nailing up the door, he starts some old rags smouldering. He and his pal then depart to get their lunch. The janitor smells smoke and soon locates the fire. The party, in their wild desire to reach safety, smash a window and receive the full force of the fire hose. Luncheon and gowns are ruined—but Ethel and her guests are rescued amid the cheers of a large crowd gathered below.

TONIGHT MAY ROBSON

Lovers of good comedy, the bright, clean sort of entertainment that has ever appealed to the vast majority of theatergoers, have a treat in store for them, and they need but go to the Opera house this evening to realize it. Under the direction of the Academic Producing company, May Robson appears in a new comedy, "Martha-by-the-Day." All who are familiar with the character of Martha Slawson as she was presented in Julie M. Lippmann's widely read novel, will appreciate the comic possibilities of the new role that Miss Robson has.

MISS MAY ROBSON
In "Martha-By-the-Day," Opera House Today and Tuesday.

That comedienne's well defined ability as an impersonator of eccentric women long ago placed her in the foremost rank of our American actresses; she possesses an innate and infectious sense of humor coupled with a keen insight into human nature, and the faculty of both forceful and delicate expression, and consequently is able to portray something more than a mere type in the characters she assumes.

"Martha-by-the-Day" is native both in plot and characters. The central figure is a maid-of-all-work, who has a touch of Irish and is a New Yorker. In order to have her children reside in a little better locality than would otherwise be possible, she adds to the family income by charwork performed upon daily visits to wealthy homes. Her Harlem flat has a spare room to which are brought the unfortunates of life who chance to cross her path. Here they are guests rather than objects of charity. Martha's quaint philosophy, unfailing optimism and material help have brought sunshine into the life of Claire Lang. The story of the comedy centers in Martha's efforts to advance her protege's love affair. There are abundant laughable situations and plenty of romance in the play. From the kitchen of Martha's flat the action wanders to the magnificent trellis room and to a pretty gate lodge of a summer home in the Catskill mountains.

Miss Robson has the advantage of a splendid supporting company which includes Jane Heron, Langdon Gillet, Enid [illegible], Henrietta McDannel, Edwin [illegible], Coates Gwynne, Mary Hershel, Roy Ardmore, Elizabeth Warren and others.

"CABIRIA," A CLASSICAL LOVE STORY IN FILM FORM BY D'ANNUNZIO

There is in "Cabiria," the stupendous photo spectacle by D'Annunzio that is to be shown at the Opera house on Wednesday, November 18, for four days, a tender love interest which starts at the beginning of the picture and is maintained all through the two hours and 40 minutes which are taken in exhibiting the picture. A little girl, Cabiria, is rescued from sacrifices to the god Moloch by a chivalrous Roman patrician. They are parted. She becomes a slave to the Carthaginian goddess. The patrician goes to fight in the battles of the Roman republic. Nevertheless he is true to the sentiment which the beautiful little Sicilian girl has inspired in him. In after years he rescues her from Carthaginian persecutors. He saves her from destruction and molestation at the hands of the furious high priest and finally when the storm and carnage of the great epoch is cleared away he takes the beautiful girl to his home in Rome as his bride.

His Fidus Achates is a colossal slave who helps him to preserve the girl. This slave's devotion to his patrician master furnishes one of the most pathetic episodes in the spectacle.

teurized at 140 degrees for 20 minutes is safe.

There is no reason for alarm. So long as the disease continues all milk and milk products from the infected districts should be pasteurized. Any consumer of milk who is not certain of his supply should home pasteurize. Physicians in the district or near it should inquire carefully into their cases of stomatitis.

CUT DOWN ON FOOD

[illegible] writes: "I am a man five feet eight inches tall and weigh 181 pounds. I am too fat from my hips up. Is there any harmless remedy to reduce flesh? I get plenty of exercise and am not a heavy eater."

REPLY.

The only medicine that would help you is thyroid, and that is much too powerful to take except when under close observation.

You can reduce by reducing the amount of food eaten. You may not consider yourself a hearty eater, but you eat too much.

NOT ABDOMINAL CANCER

E. L. A. writes: "We are told that 80 per cent of the inflammatory diseases peculiar to women and 50 per cent of all operations performed by surgeons on the pelvic organs are the result of gonorrhal infection. Are communicable diseases of this nature requiring surgery more apt to develop at change of life than earlier? Does the term 'abdominal cancer' apply to infection of this nature? Is there any connection between fibroids and venereal diseases?"

REPLY.

1, 2, 3. No.

NO TREATMENT NEEDED

L. L. L. writes: "What is the cause of shingles? Is there any known treatment for it? Will plenty of exercise prevent it from breaking out?"

REPLY.

1. Shingles is generally classed as a form of neuralgia. The eruption follows a nerve trunk and the pain is relieved by remedies which relieve neuralgic pain.
2. It gets well without treatment. Salicylates ease the pain. Sterile dusting powders are of service.
3. No. It will help, but there are other factors which enter into the situation. If you have repeated attacks you should change some of your habits.

NO ORGANIC DISEASE

Mrs. H. S. writes: "Do you think there is anything wrong with a man who continues to lose weight, but feels well? My husband weighed between 190 and 200 pounds a year ago. He does not weigh 160 pounds now. He is 41 years old and of average height."

REPLY.

Your husband has lost 40 pounds in a year and feels well. A disease such as cancer and consumption capable of causing a loss of 40 pounds in a year would show in other ways.

The fact that he feels well makes me think that he has no organic disease.

THESE TABLETS DANGEROUS

E. M. Y. writes: "A quarter of one of Bernay's antiseptic tablets (white), No. 180, taken once a day, was recommended to me as being a good remedy for clearing the complexion. I have been taking that dose every morning for three weeks. It has acted as a laxative, and I think I have felt better since I have been taking it. I have, however, been advised that even that small dose is poisonous to the system, and in time would cause death. Will you please advise me if that is true?"

REPLY.

A manufacturer informs me that you have been taking a large dose of corrosive sublimate. Stop it.
